

5 Simple Reasons to be Thankful for Being Minimalist « Far Beyond The Stars

There are a lot of reasons to be thankful for living a simple minimalist life. Here are the five that came to my mind just now.

I'm thankful for...

1. Having peace of mind. I love that all of my important stuff fits in a bag that I can carry anywhere with me. I can be anywhere, and not have to worry about anything bad happening to my stuff. There's no need to worry about overdue project deadlines, as I have the time to do them immediately. Peace of mind is beautiful. How being minimalist can lead to peace of mind.
2. Being able to focus on the important. To me, being minimalist is about time management. The world is overflowing with distractions, and it's easy to get sucked into doing things that you're not really interested in. Being able to opt out of that chaos, and focus on what you really want to achieve is incredibly important. How to stop doing the unimportant.
3. That there is no clutter in my life. Once in awhile someone will ask me 'should I keep this tiny bit of broken plastic in a drawer somewhere?' and I say 'no, recycle it, you don't need it.' and they think I'm crazy and save it anyway. Isn't saving broken things in drawers silly? A lot of people will think you're weird for being minimalist, but the funny thing is, the joke is on them. Minimalists are going on vacation five times a year (or working from a beach all year), and the clutterers are spending all of that time sorting through drawers full of broken crap. How to unclutter your life.
4. Having the time to focus on eating right. I always have time to prepare meals for myself that are made out of healthy ingredients that come from real food (like vegetables!) Processed foods are so bad for you, especially corn in a can. High fructose corn syrup is just insane, why do so many people drink refined grains? The ability to eat food that's made out of food is definitely worth being thankful for. How to eat real food.

5. Attaining freedom from location. I'm incredibly thankful for being able to actually be in Chicago for thanksgiving this year. In previous years I was always tied to a job that would only give me Thursday off, so it was impossible to fly home. In a week I'll be working from my girlfriend's apartment back in Brooklyn, then I'll fly back to Chicago and spend New Years at a lodge in Wisconsin. Achieving freedom from location is not easy, but the benefits are endless. How to achieve location independence.
