

How Being Minimalist Can Make it Possible to Live Anywhere « Far Beyond The Stars

Karol Gajda can teach you to be free.

Some people are content to live their lives in three places 95% of the time.

They valiantly wake up every morning, put on clothes, and walk the five steps to their car.

They fire it up and drive to work, where they spend twelve hours checking Facebook and doing what they're told.

Then they go home, exhausted.

Once a year they hop aboard a flight to a cheap beach somewhere and spend a few days getting sunburned and sipping tequila.

Does that life sound familiar?

These people have convinced themselves that this is the only reality. There is no other option but to maintain the status-quo and deal.

Until they get to retire at some point impossibly far into the future, after they've wasted their youth. Then what?

Well you might be taking that path, but it's not the only option.

There are people who've decided to opt out of this life sentence of working until you die.

These people want to teach you how to free yourself (if you want to.)

I want to introduce you to my friend Karol Gajda.

Karol went from having the house and an expensive car to living and working from anywhere in very little time.

Currently he's teaching people how to attain his level of freedom over at Ridiculously Extraordinary. He just made a guitar with his bare hands in India! How awesome is that?

You can do this too, Karol can teach you how.

A few weeks ago Karol emailed me a Minimalist Quick Start Guide based off my work in The Art of Being Minimalist.

I've delayed too long in releasing it, so I'm just going to put it up here now!

The Minimalist Quick Start Guide explains Karol's own journey towards living a minimalist life free from the confines of society's expectation. It's awesome, it's free.

Definitely check out Karol's work at Ridiculously Extraordinary.
