

The Minimalist Business Journey Towards Freedom « Far Beyond The Stars

Our Goal is to Live and Work from Anywhere

Written by Everett Bogue | Follow me on Twitter.

As I'm writing this, I'm flying high above Lake Michigan towards Chicago, where we'll stop over for a few minutes before heading on to Denver and then Boulder, Colorado.

Traveling reminds me why I'm a writer. I do this because I want more people to have the crazy amount of freedom to go anywhere that I do.

This is the ultimate purpose of having a minimalist business: to make it possible to live and work from anywhere.

A year ago, I never thought I'd be able to move whenever I want and live and work from anywhere. A year later, I've lived in more cities in one year than I have in my entire life. I've traveled to more places this year than I ever had before. Meanwhile, I was able to keep my business going via the Internet to fund my life.

You deserve to journey to freedom.

Most people get two weeks of vacation a year. When I had a day job, I created such a facade about how important I was, that I never even took many of my vacation days –how will they survive if I leave for even a week?! I know plenty of people who do or have done the same.

Anyway, I'm not trying to get all philosophical. I just want to point out that there are other ways to live your life instead of in the cubicle, on the retail floor, or wherever it is that you may spend 80% of your awake time.

We're in the midst of an Internet business revolution.

I'm convinced that the Internet provides nearly unlimited potential to individuals who are brave enough to start to begin capitalizing on the infinite selling power of digital media. No overhead, unlimited copies of data, the ability to communicate over the entire planet instantly.

Never before have we had this opportunity.

Seth Godin said something recently on a live broadcast with Penelope Trunk that fascinated me. Gen-Y (my generation, the kids who are around 25 these days) are the last generation who will remember what the world was like before the Internet broke down all of the barriers. We're the ambassadors of change between the old and the young.

Isn't that remarkable? My generation is like the translator between the people who think the only way to find success is to climb the corporate ladder or suck up to a gatekeeper.

Everyone younger than me can't even conceive of wanting to join the rat race willingly. Why would you? There are better options now.

Change is difficult.

Yes, it's scary to know that your own fate is in your hands. But isn't it scarier to put your fate in the hands of a corporation that will use you until they don't need you anymore, and then out you go?

This is why I'm working on my next e-book, Minimalist Business, which I've talked about before. I've spent hundreds of hours over the last few months perfecting the details, the tools, the theories in the book — all because I want to help as many people as I can start to enjoy the freedom of having the ability to travel at anytime. To set your own hours. To spend time making work that matters.

Another thing that Seth is always saying, especially in his latest book Linchpin, is that it is absolutely essential to set a ship date on a product. I've known so many artists who don't set ship dates, and they work on their art forever — it's never perfect, so it's never done. So no one ever sees it.

- If you're making a painting, you have to set a date to hang in a gallery.
- If you have a day job, you have to set a date to quit (if you want to.)
- If you're writing a book you have to set a date to publish it.

So here's the deal with Minimalist Business:

On May 10th at 10am EST, I'll be releasing Minimalist Business for 24 hours only to the readers of Far Beyond The Stars.

Don't miss the launch! Sign up for free updates via email or rss.

As I work on Minimalist Business, I'm beginning to realize just how big and important this project is. If I didn't set a ship date, it's the kind of thing that I could work on for 10 years. But by that time the opportunity will be gone, because everyone with a head on their shoulders will be location independent. I'll be releasing it whether or not it's perfect.

I'm only releasing it for 24 hours, because I want to limit the initial group of people who get the book to a small few. This way we can work closer together on building your minimalist businesses, and in answering questions that come up about how to execute the techniques described in the book.

Perfect is the enemy of done. If you wait until things are perfect, chances are you'll never finish.

The brilliant thing about digital media, and using e-junkie, is that I can send updated copies of the e-book. I know there will be missing pieces of the puzzle, and I'll spell a few words wrong in the initial release. That's okay! I think this is a part of making a difference. The ideas matter first and foremost.

Everyone who purchases a copy on May 10th will receive free updates for a year.

I fully expect to work on expanding and revising this e-book for a long time to come. I'll do this by answering questions that new minimalist business owners, as they come up. I'll add new sections as new technologies become prevalent. I'll fix any minor grammar errors that you will inevitably notice and email me about.

I realize that this is a different way of doing things, but running a minimalist business is by nature challenging the status quo. I feel that it's better to get the important information out there, rather than wait until it doesn't matter anymore.

A limited release for first wave of aspiring minimalist business owners.

A limited group of individuals aspiring to start their minimalist business will be able to join me on May 10th as we work towards making many more minimalist businesses successful.

I hope you'll join me, if living and working from anywhere is your goal.

If not, no worries! I'm going to continue to write insanely useful content on this blog for free for everyone who's interested. This will always be the priority to me, helping people change the world for free. Because it's more important to me to give everyone access to the information they need to make a difference in their lives.

I'll have more information as we get closer to the 10th. Thank you for being a part of this minimalist business revolution.

-Everett Bogue

Oh! If you want to get started learning about how to start a minimalist business, here's some of the highlights of what I've written before on the subject:

The Simple Guide to Making Money Online

The Surprising Truth About Using Minimalism to Leave Your Day Job

9 Minimalist Steps Toward Passive Income

Excerpted from The Minimalist Business Journey Towards Freedom « Far Beyond The Stars | Augmented Humanity, Second Selves, and Cybernetic Yoga

<http://www.farbeyondthestars.com/the-minimalist-business-journey-towards-freedom/>

READABILITY — An Arc90 Laboratory Experiment <http://lab.arc90.com/experiments/readability>